TV TOMMY

Up till last Tuesday, if you were looking for Tommy Anderson, there was only one place to find him. And that was plunk in front of the TV set in the darkened living room.

There was no doubt about it. Tommy Anderson had the worst case of TVitis on record. All summer long, from the minute he got up till the minute he was dragged off to sleep, he didn't budge from in front of the set. It got so bad that once when he had a toothache, the dentist had to come to the house and work on him right in the living room.

Only trouble was that his mother was waiting nervously in the kitchen. And a cowboy movie was on the TV set at the time. When a gunfight started, she thought maybe Tommy was shooting the dentist or vice versa, and she fainted dead away . . .

Yes siree, it was really rough on Tommy's mother. She had to bring him his meals to where he was sitting in front of the set. And more than once Tommy would bring a forkful of hamburger up to his ear instead of his mouth, because he never once looked away from the screen.

So much food fell onto the rug that Bink, Tommy's dog, who always lay there, gained ten pounds in three weeks, and had to be put on a strict diet by the veterinarian.

And fresh air . . . that was what Tommy's parents worried about most. He never got out of the house. They tried everything to lure him away from the set—bought him a new bike, a dozen kites, even set up a tent on the front lawn. But Tommy never budged.

Now don't get the idea that all that time Tommy spent in front of TV was a complete waste. Because Tommy was learning a lot of things while he was watching . . .

Take the time Tommy's parents left him with a sitter. The sitter was a teen-age girl whose sweat shirt and blue jeans bulged with muscle. Her name was Ella, and her hobby was wrestling. Before Tommy's parents left for the evening, Ella assured them that when Tommy's bed time came, she wouldn't have an ounce of trouble getting him away from the set.

"See this muscle," she said, flexing a bicep as big as a baseball, "your kid doesn't stand a chance. When I say it's bed-time, he'll just haveta go. Or my name ain't Ella Malone."

Well, all that night at the movies Tommy's parents kept worrying about what Ella would do to their dear little boy. They got so panicky, they left before the picture ended, and drove home fast as they could.

When they got into the living room, the first thing the sitter said to them was, "My name ain't Ella Malone."

Her voice was low and rasping. And it had to be, because she was twisted up on the floor like a pretzel, her legs locked behind her neck, and her arms tangled in somewhere. And sitting quietly nearby, watching TV, of course, was Tommy.

Know what had happened?

Tommy had seen so many wrestling bouts on TV that he'd learned a lot of fancy holds. And when Ella had begun dragging him away from the set, a combination headlock-full nelson-airplane spin-and-body slam had come in very handy . . .

Then there was the time Mrs. Anderson was baking a cake. She'd just put the pan into the oven, closed the oven door, and walked over to the sink for a glass of water—

A second later she was back at the oven, her face whiter than a false tooth in a display case. Because Tommy's voice was coming from behind the oven door. "Lemme out! Lemme out!" she could hear him screaming.

She fainted, of course—and only when she came to did she learn that it had been just another trick that Tommy had learned by watching TV. Seems that he'd seen so many ventriloquist shows that he'd learned how to throw his voice.

It was a long time before Mrs. Anderson could bring herself to bake another cake . . .

Well, time kept going by—day after day crammed with sunshine—and Tommy never budged from the set. He kept getting paler and paler, and his parents were going crazy with worry.

Then last Tuesday came . . .

That was the day Tommy's father got the wonderful idea—the sure-fire way of getting

Tommy out of the house. He got tickets for a live TV show at one of the major studios, and asked Tommy to go along with him.

Tommy thought it over for a long minute, then he said yes.

So that afternoon he left the house with his father, and they drove thru a heavy rain (that day, of course, the sun couldn't be shining!) to the studio.

The studio was a shadowy barn-like building with lots of camp chairs behind the big cameras that were aimed at a small stage. Tommy and his father found two seats up front, and waited for the show to start.

Now the show was a quiz show, and before it could start, contestants had to be picked from the audience. The quiz-master walked up the aisle, asking for volunteers. First one to raise his hand, of course, was Tommy.

"Sorry, sonny," said the quiz-master. He was a roly-poly man with a loud syrupy voice. "Sorry—but this is a big people's show. We can't use you. But I'll tell you what we're going to do. We're going to use your daddy!"

And that's how it happened that Mr. Anderson found himself up on that small stage in front of the cameras, feeling lower than a whale bone at the bottom of the ocean. Mr. Anderson was in no frame of mind for a quiz show. He'd spent the last few months doing nothing but worry about Tommy. His mind was tired and fuzzy after a long string of sleepless nights. In fact, he felt that being on the show was the worst thing that could have happened to him. Because when he missed the questions, Tommy would despise him. And never at any time after this would Tommy listen to any reason he might think up for Tommy's leaving the TV set and going out into the fresh air . . .

"Ha! Ha!" roared the quiz-master. "Here come the questions. And are they lulus! I'll read them all at once—and then I'll give you a minute to think of the answers . . .

"Better brace yourself—here they come! This is the first question: How many energy calories are there in one tablespoonful of honey?

"Second question: Who received the Nobel Prize for chemistry in 1918?

"And last but not least: What is the population of Lebanon?"

Mr. Anderson stood there, the sweat breaking out cold on his forehead. Those were rough questions—and his mind was like a soldiers' rifle at a 4th of July celebration: full of blanks . . .

"Your minute's up! Now listen closely, everybody, while the gentleman gives his answers!"

Mr. Anderson took a deep breath. His mouth sagged open . . . and then he heard a voice saying, "There are 62 calories in a tablespoonful of Honey." Mr. Anderson gasped. THE VOICE SEEMED TO BE COMING FROM HIS MOUTH! A moment later his eyes were bulging as the voice went on: "Fritz Haber got the Nobel Prize for chemistry in 1918." And Mr. Anderson's knees were buckling when the voice ended with: "The population of Lebanon is 1,285,000."

"You got them right!" yelled the quiz-master: "Because of the value of the prize, that was the hardest set of questions ever asked on this program! And the gentleman answered every single one of them correctly!"

Know what had happened? .

Tommy had used ventriloquism to throw his voice up into his father's mouth. And Tommy had seen so many quiz shows on TV, heard so many lectures, watched so many educational films, that he knew all the answers . . .

Just then they wheeled the prize onto the stage. Mr. Anderson turned to look at it—and a second later they were wheeling HIM off the stage.

He had fainted.

The prize was a sterling silver TV set with a 486 inch screen . . .

That all happened last Tuesday, and now everyone's back on his feet and doing fine. It couldn't have worked out better. You see—Tommy's parents have placed the new set with the giant screen right against the big picture window that faces the garden.

And Tommy sits on the lawn, getting plenty of fresh air and sunshine while he watches TV.

SUPER-BRAT!

HE KNEW WHAT HE WANTED!
